

Why not give peace a chance ?

For more than a decade now, Ethiopia has lived under a permanent state of siege and war. Since the first general mobilization order under the catch word "Every thing to the war front" was launched during the Somali aggression of 1977 the country has experienced an endless series of decrees and resolutions calling upon the Ethiopian people to mobilize for what the regime calls "the final and decisive victory over the country's internal and external enemies".

The latest such 'resolution' was the one adopted by the country's rubber stamp parliament (SHENGO) which called for "Non stop recruitment" at the end of its fourth regular session which ended on 25 June. Retired army and police personnel as well as those who had been dismissed "for any reason" were urged to respond to the call. The SHENGO, even went as far as urging people who live in war affected areas to "engage in guerrilla warfare" against the guerrillas!

It is now almost a year since negotiations have started between the government on the one hand and EPLF and TPLF on the other. It is to be recalled that the beginning of negotiations had aroused much hope among the peoples of Ethiopia and the international community. But failure even to go beyond the "procedural phases" led to the collapse of the talks and as a result to intensification of the wars with all sides seemingly seeking "political solution" out of the barrel of a gun.

The intensification of military activities is all the more saddening that in spite of the tens of thousands of people that are dying every week all parties to the conflict know -or should know- that there could be no military solution to the problems at the root of the armed conflicts.

There can be no military solution first because none of the parties to the conflict can hope a decisive victory over the other. Even if most improbable victory is achieved by any of the warring parties, this would not mean elimination of the underlying causes that led to the conflicts in first place. The 'crushing victory' that Mengistu dreams of in Eritrea will not solve the fundamental problem at the root of the Eritrean war which is one of self-determination.

By EPLF's own reckoning military victory and a unilateral declaration of independence would not mean peace and tranquillity in Eritrea as long as democracy and peace do not prevail in Ethiopia.

Military victory by the Stalinist TPLF/EPDM alliance ? Although most improbable this would mean another and still more murderous round of turmoil, terror and chaos as the prospects it offers in terms of democracy is to say the least not better than the one under which the Ethiopian people have lived and suffered for so long. One by Mengistu's regime would mean another lease on life to his agonizing dictatorship.

Bitter experience has shown to the peoples of Ethiopia that "General mobilization" orders and resolutions had never solved their fundamental problems but instead had drawn the country into devastating wars, famine, exile and ever deepening political, economic, social and moral crisis. That is why their call is for peace to be given a chance. But they are also increasingly aware that for peace to prevail in our country what is needed is instauration of democracy and search for peaceful and negotiated solutions to the disastrous wars the first victims of which are the people themselves.

It is the national and historic responsibility of all opposition groups and patriotic individuals to join forces and work together to further strengthen this awareness by launching a campaign of their own : One of general mobilization for peace and Democracy. This we believe is not only more in line with the aspiration of tens of millions of Ethiopians but also the only way out of the crippling wars that are threatening the very survival of their country.

Democracy for survival

The pending threat to Ethiopia's existence has brought about a heightened activity by Ethiopians both at home and abroad. Some demonstrate, others go on strike still other convene meetings. At the end of April over two thousand Ethiopians demonstrated in Washington DC under the motto "One country, one people". Among the placards they carried one stated that they stood for "One democratic Ethiopia". In the middle of May University students in Addis Abeba were on strike. The first, and in the circumstance heroic demand was that Mengistu Haile Mariam should abdicate his office.

To extricate the country from its pending disaster many Ethiopians repeatedly ask and struggle for the formation of a transitional government. This call is simple and clear cut. Yet that it is unacceptable to Mengistu's regime and the TPLF is increasingly becoming obvious. In the process of the former's attempt to prolong a one man dictatorship and the latter's effort to replace it with a very much similar one party system, both continue to sidestep to democratic alternative. Their responsibility for mutually leading the country into disaster is not only because of the thousands of Ethiopians that are killed each day. In the eyes of posterity the fact that neither presented a democratic alternative will also be a crime for which both would be held responsible.
